

CONTRIBUTORS

Malinda Andersson is a PhD student in the Department of Sociology at Uppsala University. Her general research interest is in critical social theories and sociology of knowledge. Currently, the main focus of her research lies in the field of 'postmodern welfare'. Within this field, she combine two areas of research; sociological perspectives on social policy on the one hand, and postcolonial, feminist, and queer approaches to nation formation and differentiation on the other. Of particular interest is discursive aspects of welfare, i.e. how various families, citizen groups and social problems are constructed. In her thesis she explores the symbolic boundaries of the Swedish nation through an analysis of transnational adoption policy. Email: malinda.r.andersson@gmail.com

Say Burgin is a PhD Student in History at the University of Leeds. Her research interests include racial justice, white identities in the US, epistemologies of anti-racism, and social movements. She is currently finishing her doctoral thesis on the creation of racial justice pedagogies by white activists within U.S. social movements from the rise of Black Power through the mid-1980s. More information on her thesis, publications, teaching and other academic adventures can be found at <http://leeds.academia.edu/SayBurgin>. Email: hy08snb@leeds.ac.uk

Anne Lavanchy is a postdoctoral researcher in the Department of Social Anthropology at the University of Edinburgh. Her research interests centre around whiteness, institutions, legal anthropology, ethnicity, culture, gender, and postcolonial studies. Email: anne.lavanchy@ed.ac.uk

Kristín Loftsdóttir is a Professor of Anthropology at the University of Iceland. She received her Ph.D. in anthropology from the University of Arizona (2000). Among her books are Teaching "Race" with a Gendered Edge (coeditor 2012), The Woman who got spear on her head: The strangeness of methodology (in Icelandic, 2010). Her research focuses on Icelandic identity formation in the context of the economic crisis, in addition to a critical investigation of whiteness in relation to international development, issues relating to mobility, pastoralism and Icelandic racialized identity. Kristín Loftsdóttir, Ph.D. Professor of Anthropology, Gimli, University of Iceland, IS-101, Reykjavík, Iceland. Email: kristinl@hi.is

Linda Lund Pedersen is a MPhil/PhD-student in gender studies at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Her current research areas include: Political/existential philosophy of Hannah Arendt in regard to debates on others and nation-state in a Danish context, exemplified through family reunification policies and regulation of Muslim women's attires. She is also interested in the emergent field of postcolonialism and critical race/whiteness studies in Nordic/European contexts. She has published and edited book chapters, articles, journals and anthologies. Address: Gender Institute, London School of Economics and Political Science, Houghton Street, London WC2A 2AE, UK. Email: l.l.pedersen@lse.ac.uk

Valeria Ribeiro Corossacz teaches anthropology at the University of Modena and Reggio Emilia, Italy. She has conducted field work in Brazil and Italy. In Brazil she has been researching racism and sexism in national identity and reproductive health, racial classification in medical documents and feminist and black movements. In Italy she has worked on issues of racism in internal and external migration flows, and the intersection of racism and sexism. She has published several books and articles on these issues. Her current project focuses on whiteness and masculinity in Brazil. Address: Facoltà di Lettere e Filosofia, Largo Santa Eufemia 19, 41121 Modena. E-mail: valeria.ribeirocorossacz@unimore.it

Barbara Samaluk is a PhD research student at the Centre for Research in Equality and Diversity (BUSMAN) at Queen Mary, University of London. Her research interests include critical discourse studies, equality and diversity, Bourdieuan reflexive sociology, migration, racialization and commodification processes. Her current research is exploring commodification of migrant labour from post-socialist Europe in the UK and its effects. She has been working in human rights and antidiscrimination filed for several years in various European countries and published and edited newsletters, reports, papers and articles. Address: Centre for Research in Equality and Diversity (BUSMAN), Queen Mary, University of London, Mile End, London, UK. Email: b.samaluk@qmul.ac.uk

Sayaka Osanami Törngren is a PhD candidate in International Migration and Ethnic Relations at the Department of Language, Migration and Society at Malmö University and Institute for Research on Migration, Ethnicity and Society at Linköping University. She is also a member of Malmö Institute for Studies of Migration, Diversity and Welfare at Malmö University. Her dissertation on attitudes towards interracial marriages in Sweden is planned to be defended in October 2011. Email: sayaka.torngren@mah.se

Anna-Esther Younes is a PhD candidate in PhD Candidate in the Sociology/Anthropology of Development at the Graduate Institute in Geneva. Her research interests centre on critical race studies, whiteness, nationalism, and gender. Her PhD focuses on the construction and maintenance of the White nation in Germany, through discourses on the 'fight against Anti-Semitism'. The research aims to stress not only German racialization processes that come along with that fight (i.e. the exclusion of 'Muslims' from national narratives), but processes of racialization on a broader European level. Email: anna.younes@graduateinstitute.ch